WHAT CHANGED TODAY

What we changed today

Prepared by Beto & Cadu / Dev em Dobro. In response to your email and call of 21 Sep 2026.
Scope: the public website only. Everything described here is live on the review site.

Everything from your email of 21 September is built, plus the extra items from the call. This note is the record of what moved, why it looks the way it does, and the short list of what is still waiting on your side.

All of this is live on the review site as of 21 September.

Four things below need a decision from you rather than more work from us: the Brandon Hall artwork (section 1), the photographs (section 2), the copy for the other nine service pages (section 5), and whether Events replaces Books or sits alongside it (section 8). Section 5 also has one new question: how much of your second services drawing to apply.

1. Home — the hero and the awards

The Brandon Hall card is off the hero image, as asked, and the two GOLDS now open the Awards & Mentions block instead. Putting them first was deliberate: they are the only recent, won awards in a list where three of the five are finalist placements from 2008 and 2009.

We have no Brandon Hall artwork. The two entries currently render as a typographic "GOLD" ring so the row stays aligned. Send the logo files and they become logos, with no other change.

"See the work" now goes to Clients & Impact. It was pointing at Our Approach, which had been flagged internally as a mismatch between the label and the destination. Your email settled it.

2. Home — the numbers, the logos and the people

- The four figures sit in one horizontal line. They were a 2x2 block before, inside a fixed 760px width. That width cap had to go, or the labels would not fit across four columns.
- The client marks are on the impact cards — HEINEKEN, Coca-Cola and Shell. They sit on a white chip, because those files are coloured marks on transparency and disappear against the dark card.
- The Our People headings are in red.

On the photographs. You said the quality was not great and that some were cropped. Both were true, and one of them had a cause we could fix outright: two of the pictures in the carousel were the same photograph, the Singapore courtyard group, the second time in a smaller copy that was being stretched. That duplicate is gone.

Six more were re-framed, one by one. The worst was a picture where the automatic centre crop cut the head off the facilitator who was standing.

Two pictures still need you. One is 768x1024 and another 739x1131 — both portraits sitting in a landscape frame, so only about 40% of each is ever visible, and both are below the resolution the slot asks for. There is no larger version anywhere in what we have. If the originals exist, send them; if not, our recommendation is to drop those two.

Three more are worth your eye, and these are content calls, not technical ones: one is a 2x2 collage with "On Stage, Always" and a clipped copyright line burned into it, three carry YPO event branding burned into the frame, and one is mostly the backs of people's heads.

3. Home and Services — one partners block

The "In partnership with" strip on the home page now looks exactly like the Partners block on Services, as asked.

What was there before was two names typed by hand — Harvard and Imperial in bold, with a rule between them — while Services was already showing five partners with the real artwork. The home page was leaving out CLO100, YPO and Explore Performance without anyone having decided to.

The two pages now read from one file, so the next partner change happens once.

4. Services — the partners and the name

Harvard Business Impact and Imperial College London are on row one, with CLO100, YPO and Explore Performance below. This is a real break now, not a consequence of screen width — before, the five marks were in a single wrapping row that happened to fall 3 + 2.

The two crests were also made larger. The old size was set for them to sit beside three wordmarks; alone on a row, at the old size, the row you asked us to promote read as two small stamps.

"Top 150 Leadership Development" is now "Senior Leadership Development" — on the card, in the menu, in the breadcrumb and as the page title.

The web address changed too, as you then asked. The page now lives at /services/senior-leadership-development.

Nothing breaks. The old address forwards permanently to the new one, so the link already live, the one in the sitemap and the ones in the emails you have sent all still land in the right place. Three older addresses from the previous site used to point at the old one; they now go straight to the new address rather than bouncing twice.

5. Service pages — the new internal layout

The internal service page is rebuilt on the two drawings you sent. Six pieces, top to bottom: the hero, "What we do" in two columns, the three audience cards, "How we work" in two columns, the strip of practices, and the line that leads into the case study. The first drawing gave us all six; the second one, covered further down, replaced the last two.

Only Senior Leadership Development has the new copy — it is the one your mockup draws. The other nine service pages now use the new layout with the text they already had, and the two blocks that have no text simply do not appear. Nothing is broken, but there is a rough edge we would rather name than hide: on those nine, the heading "What we do" currently sits above a paragraph that describes an outcome. That is the wrong label over the right words, and the fix is copy from you, not code from us.

Two places where we knowingly differ from the drawing:

- The line under the hero title is the one marked FINAL in two of your documents, not the mockup's "For the leaders who shape what comes next." Same rule the service cards already follow. Tell us to switch and we will.
- The three cards have the same background. Your mockup looks as though the first is white, but sampled pixel by pixel all three measure the same tone.

The three card photographs are in, with the wording on them. The boardroom at sunset sits on Executive Teams, the meeting on SLT / ET-1, and the audience on Top 100 - 150. Each carries the audience name at the top left and the three words at the bottom right, as in the crop you sent.

They are cropped from the centre, and we checked the arithmetic rather than assuming: the frame is slightly wider than the files, so it trims about 11% of the height, and in all three the highest head sits well inside what remains. Nobody is cut.

The photographs are darkened slightly at the top and bottom edges only, which is what keeps the white wording readable. The middle is left alone, because that is where the faces are. Two lines need it: the Executive Teams name falls across the sunset window, and the SLT credential falls across a pale shoulder.

The icon and the red label under each photograph are gone, as asked. They were saying, thirty pixels below the picture, the same name the picture already carries. Each card now opens straight into its heading.

One consequence worth recording: that red label was the only version of the audience name a screen reader could hear, because the one on the photograph was deliberately hidden from it to avoid saying the name twice. With the label gone, the one on the photograph was unhidden in the same change. Nothing is lost to anyone.

One spelling note. The wording reads "judgement". Your crop spells it that way and so does the paragraph on that same card; the earlier drawing had "judgment" without the e, and following it would have put the same word two ways inside one card.

The second image was found, and it changes the row under How we work. Your note mentions two drawings, and the second one was in the folder all along under a different name. It frames the page from the cards down, so it shows the practices and the case study line but not the "How we work" block above them.

That block stays. Its headline and paragraph are the ones from your first drawing, unchanged. What the second drawing replaces is the line beneath the row, which now reads "Featured case study" and leads into the case.

The row itself is your eight, from the first drawing: immersions, live business challenges, Mastery Labs, coaching, peer learning, leadership experiments, everyday habits and measurement, each with the icon you drew for it. It briefly carried the shorter set from the second drawing before you asked for the eight back.

We changed only that section. The same drawing also redraws the block above it, with a different label, headline and card copy, and with a label and a three-word credential sitting on each photograph. We left that alone because the instruction named one section, and the rest is a larger change we would rather you ask for than assume. Say the word and it is a short job.

The closing statement, "Different organisations. Different transformations.", no longer appears on that page. Your drawing puts the case study line in its slot. The words are still held and come back the moment you want them somewhere else.

One debt is settled. The row used to be built from the words in your own services sentence, which is why it could only ever show five of your eight: "leadership experiments", "everyday habits" and "measurement" appear in no sentence we hold. The row no longer derives from that sentence, so all eight are there. Your services copy is untouched.

Everything after the case study line is still outside both drawings: the invitation and Related Services. They are on the page from earlier decisions and are marked in our code as not drawn so nobody mistakes them for approved.

6. About

- The blocks are reordered, 1-2-3 into 2-3-1. Our Identity, the block with the photograph, is now third.
- The offices are static, five across, always open. The carousel is gone from this page and stays on the four others that use it.
- The offices also appear across the bottom of the hero image, just under the figures. They started at the right, as your email says, and moved to the centre on your call. The space above and below that line was then tuned so it reads even: measured in the browser, the visible gap was 23 pixels above and 42 below, and it is now 26 and 30. The fold did not grow.
- The purpose block is now "Our people live our purpose", with your four paragraphs verbatim.

One thing left the site, and it should be a conscious choice rather than a side effect: the quote about the firm's roots in Big 4 consulting was in that block, and your replacement text covers the same ground. Keeping both would have been two voices saying one thing. It is recoverable in one command if you want it somewhere else.

We wrote the heading as "Our people live our purpose." rather than in full capitals. On this page the small labels are the things in capitals and the headings are not, so a 40px all-caps line would read as a different kind of object. One class changes it if you prefer.

7. Team

- The hero is your new text. Your third line was already the subtitle on the page, word for word, which also confirms the 60+ figure.
- The global faculty is grouped by region — seven groups, 23 people, in the order of your table. The region is a heading now rather than a repeated line under each face.
- Maliha is MENA, Carol is UKEE, Nic is Asia.
- The names are in red, on the leadership cards and in the listing.
- The life-at-DNA carousel from the home page is now in the One team block, in place of the photograph of six of you behind the counter. That picture is kept and comes back in one step if you prefer it.

Two things the grouping made visible, both already present in your own table: "UKEE" and "Europe" now sit next to each other as two separate groups, and India has nobody in it.

One accessibility note, for the record. The brand red on the faculty background measures 3.96:1, just under the 4.5:1 that accessibility guidance asks for body-sized text. We kept your colour. If the standard has to be met, the fix is a slightly darker red of the same hue, applied in all three places at once — never in one, or you end up with two reds.

8. Books, Insights and Events

The books are now a section of the Insights page. The separate Books page is gone and its address forwards permanently to the books section of Insights. The three older addresses that used to point at it now go straight to the new place rather than bouncing twice.

The menu item "Books" is now "Events," and the Insights item reads "Insights & Books."

That second change matters more than it looks. When "Books" left the menu, the word disappeared from the navigation entirely, so anyone looking for the books had to guess they live inside Insights. The redirect only helps people who already have the old address.

The Events page is empty. There is no events content anywhere — no entries in the CMS, no document. It carries the same "coming soon" treatment as Awards and Our Partnerships, and it is hidden from search until it has something to say. We need the events themselves from you: sessions, dates, descriptions, images.

Please confirm one thing before this goes to review. This item came from the call notes rather than your email, and our reading is that Events replaces Books in the menu. If you meant Events and Books as two items, it is a small change, but better made now.

The book section on the home page stays. Your email asks for awards above the book, which is you moving it, not removing it.

What we need from you

1. Brandon Hall logo files.
2. Higher-resolution originals for two life-at-DNA photographs, or permission to drop them. Plus your call on the collage, the three with YPO branding, and the one showing backs of heads.
3. Copy for the other nine service pages — the introduction blocks, the three audiences, the practices strip and the closing line.
4. Events content.
5. Confirmation that Events replaces Books in the menu.
6. Three short approvals on wording we wrote where you had none: the Events page title, the books section heading on Insights, and the Insights browser title.
7. Whether to apply the rest of your second drawing — the new label, headline and card copy above the practices strip, and the label and credential on each card photograph.
